BRUISED TURKEYS MEAN MONEY LOST

Bruised turkeys cost the producer money.

That's the warning from Lee W. Herrick, associate poultry husbandman at VPI. He says birds are easily bruised in the loading operation, especially on the wing tips and the keels.

Turkeys should be handled carefully at all times. Grade C birds usually bring about half as much as grade A birds. Some causes of bruises are: crowding of growing birds; cannibalism; fighting; flying from high roosts; using crates too small; placing too many birds in a crate; roughness in catching, handling, removing from crates; and stampeding.

Cannibalism is more of a problem with white-feathered birds and with birds in confinement. It can be stopped by debeaking. Giving the birds more space, using turkey bits or pig rings, and feeding greens or good quality baled alfalfa hay sometimes helps. Bruises caused by flying can be reduced by wing notching the birds.

Although bruises and abrasions are probably the chief causes of low grades, other causes include: lack of finish; excessive pinfeathers; deformities; breast blisters; and poor dressing, which results in improper bleeding, torn skin, hard scald, broken legs and wings, and in skin abrasions.

The producer can often improve the finish and pinfeather length by holding the flock an extra week or two. There is a definite pinfeather cycle, and if the pinfeathers are short, waiting two or three weeks will improve this condition.

Deformities may be caused by disease, poor management, poorly formulated feeds, or possibly heredity. Breast blisters may be caused by injuries, and are more of problem in birds on wire or slat platforms.

ELECTRICITY CAN'T THINK BUT YOU CAN!

By L. C. Meyer

Every now and then you pick up your newspaper and see a story similar to this: "Prominent local citizen dies in freak auto crash. The victim apparently lost control at the wheel, and his car hit a street light pole. Unhurt from the crash, he was electrocuted as he attempted to step out of the auto. Police say that the auto bumper touched a live wire in the pole."

A relatively minor traffic accident turned into a tragedy .. because electricity is always alert and ready. The auto, insulatted by its rubber tires, became charged with high voltage electricity as it contacted the live wire on the pole. As the driver attempted to flee, he probably stepped to the street, maintaining contact with the car through his hands or body. He may even have gotten safely out, only to turn and shut the door. In whatever manner it happened, his body provided the path for the electricity to follow on its way to to ground.

Should you ever get into such a situation .. and we hope you never do .. DON'T LEAVE THE CAR! It's natural to want to. For after the loud crash as a car plunges into a power pole, there is an almost deathly silence. Then creeping into this silence is an omnious snapping and crackling sound. Wisps of smoke may appear around the tires, or where weeds and grass may be touching the car. This means your car is charged with high voltage electricity. Fight that impulse to get out of the car and away from that "dangerous snapping sound" as quickly as possible. Unless a fire breaks out, you are safe where you are.

If you feel that you must leave the car, make sure you do it this way: Stand, with your body leaning out through the open door; then jump clear of the car, with both feet landing on the ground. It is very important that at no time you touch simultaneously both the car and the earth. Almost without a doubt, electrocution will result when your body is contacting both the charged car and the earth or street at the same time.

Should you be the first to arrive on the scene of an auto-utility pole mishap, stop and think. Do not touch the car and be electrocted. A dead hero can accomplish nothing' Tell the occupants of the car to "stay put." Then stand guard until someone else arrives. Send that person for help while you continue to stand guard.

Always remember that electricity can't think—but you can!

Bulk Milk-Holding Tanks Used Increasingly in State

Dairymen who need to replace conventionaly milk-can-cooling tanks are advised to consider a bulk-milk-holding tank.

VPI specialists say the use of the bulk tanks is increasing rapidly in Virginia. The cost is rather high at present, but with more and more tank trucks hauling milk from the farm to the plant, dairymen may be required to install the bulk tanks. Be sure to buy a tank from a reliable dairy equipment concern, and to consider future needs so the proper size tank is installed.

ABBITT HOPEFUL FOR RECONSIDERATION

Washington, Nov. 17.- Representative Watkins M. Abbitt has expressed hope that a personal review of Virginia's drought conditions by Secretary of Agriculture Benson will result in approval of relief for 29 counties in the Old Dominion.

Abbitt, commenting on the prospects for Monday's meeting of top Virginia leaders with Department of Agriculture officials, said he felt that consideration by the Secretary would result in a more sympathetic consideration of the factors involved in drought conditions in Virginia.

Earlier this week Abbitt requested Benson to personally review the facts presented by the Virginia counties through the State Drought Committee, seeking to reverse the decision on Virginia's first application which was disapproved on November 5.

EATING HABITS ARE IMPORTANT

Chicago, Ill.- The old saying "carry to bed and carly to rise makes a man healthy...." can only be true in the long run if you get up early enough to eat a good breakfast.

A recent two-year governmental survey of 600 men working in industrial plants revealed that many are not getting their daily three square meals. Other research has shown this is also true of teen-age girls, working women, and women worried about their weight.

The meal most often neglected is breakfast.

"Start the day out right, means eat a nutritionally balanced breakfast, one that will fuel your body for the activities ahead," according to Milton Hult, President of the National Dairy Council.

The survey of 600 industrial workers was conducted by the New Jersey Experiment Station. Figures from the study issued by the U. S. Department of Agriculture indicated:

1. A fourth of the men were low in calcium.

2. A fourth of the men were low in vitamin C.

3. Diet records and medical exams revealed shortages of the important B vitomins (riboflavin and thiamine).

4. Yet 41% of the men were overweight.

Conclusions included:

1. The men with shortages drank too little milk and ate too few citrus fruits, tomatoes, and green, leafy vegetables.

2. Diet records showed the overweight men were slighting breakfast and then easing mid-morning hungar with high calorie snacks sold at the plant.

The report cited this latter kind of eating as leading to overweight and causing a lack of appetite for food rich in minerals and vitamins.

"Part of the trouble with American eating habits," Hult says, "is so many people think all you have to do is count calories. They think if you consume too many, too little, or a specified amount of calories each day, you'll be accordingly fat, thin, or just right."

The really important thing, the dairy organization president says, it to get about one-third of the nutrients you need at each meal . . . breakfast, lunch and dinner .. with portions geared to your energy need.

The easiest way of doing this, he says, is to choose the protective foods (dairy foods, meats, fish eggs, fruits, vegetables, cereals, and bread.) These foods give a high proportion of nutrients to the number of calories they contain.
